

Menota: The charter corpus

The charter corpus contains all preserved charters in the Norwegian language up to and including 1310 and a few charters after that year. There are 172 original charters in Norwegian, including some parallel ones. In addition, there are 14 place holders, referring to charters which are lost but attested through younger vidimus charters (Norwegian: vidisser). They have usually been given a separate number in Diplomatarium Norvegicum, but – as in the Corpus Codicum series – we have rendered them as part of the actual vidimus charter. In the vidimus charters, they will be found as the transcript, clearly marked as such in the edition. Finally, there are presently 3 charters wholly in Latin and 5 charters later than 1310.

By the end of 2025, we expect that all editions of charters will be introduced by summaries taken from Diplomatarium Norvegicum, Regesta Norvegica and the Corpus Codicum series.

Each charter is rendered on a diplomatic level and charters later than March 1308 (and a few earlier ones) also on a normalised level. They also offer a full morphological annotation (dictionary entry and grammatical form of each word).

Also by the end of 2025, we expect all charters up to and including 1310 to contain a translation into Modern Norwegian, based on the Corpus Codicum series (by Finn Hødnebo up to 1300 and Erik Simensen thereafter).

A few charters also include a photo, such as the two earliest charters, DN 1:3 and 1:7. We hope to add more photos as they become available in colour and at a good resolution. In the meantime, we refer users to the photos in the Corpus Codicum series.

Note that the orthography of the dictionary entries in the annotation is based on the orthography developed at Gammelnorsk ordboksverk (e.g. hofuðøy), but it will eventually be changed into that of Ordbog over det norrøne prosasprog (e.g. høfuðey). The ONP orthography has been introduced for the charters after March 1308, and will hopefully be extended to the rest of the corpus in the coming years.
