

Menota: Le lingue nordiche corpus

The Le lingue nordiche corpus contains a selection of medieval Nordic texts, comprising brief texts in each of the languages Danish, Swedish, Norwegian and Icelandic, supplemented by one text in Gutnish, making a total of 17 texts. They are based on the printed volume Le lingue nordiche nel medioevo (Oslo: Novus 2018). Each text in Le lingue nordiche offers a parallel translation to Italian. Presently, the four Old Norwegian texts in this book have been transferred to the new, Menota-style format, and the remaining 13 texts will eventually be transferred, too.

By clicking on a sentence, this sentence will be highlighted in the original text as well as in the translation. This feature works both ways. Furthermore, each word has been annotated for morphology, displaying the citation form in an appropriate dictionary (lemma), word class (part of speech) and grammatical form (for inflected words). Simply click on any word and see the full annotation in a pop-up window. The display and search facilities are identical to those that apply to other texts in the Menota archive.

As of 2025, the corpus will be extended to longer texts from a variety of sources. While the 17 texts referred to above each have a length of about 1000 words, the new, extended corpus will offer texts of around 4000 words. At the moment, extracts from the Scanian law in Codex runicus and Piðriks saga af Bern, as well as the complete Íslendingabók are in preparation.

The building of the corpus will be coordinated by an editorial board, comprising of Marina Buzzoni (University of Venice), Anna Cappellotto (University of Verona), Odd Einar Haugen (University of Bergen) and Andrea Meregalli (University of Milan).
